3079 South Academy Blvd., Colorado Springs, CO 80916
Grades: k-12
Director: Isabel Malacara

Upon discovering the opportunity Hope Online and its curricula offers students, Isabel Malacara and her husband, Dr. Malacara, decided online education would benefit their community. Thus, they established All Peoples Learning Center (APLC) in 2006 to serve children in Colorado Springs.

“Our students just wanted a better education than they were receiving previously. Some did not excel in the traditional classroom and naturally gravitated toward the online curriculum,” asserts Dr. Malacara.

Due to the individualization that Hope Online’s curriculum affords them, the students at APLC progress at their own pace. Dr. and Mrs. Malacara have noticed improvements in all of the Hope Online students. “We provide an environment with adult guidance that is conducive to student learning,” says Mrs. Malacara. “We offer the support the students need to achieve academic success. The students themselves are very motivated.”

In fact, the motto of APLC is: If it is to be, it is up to me. Dr. Malacara notes, “We teach our students that they alone are in charge of their futures. They can achieve anything with hard work and dedication. We are there to help along the way, but their futures are in their own hands.”

With the guidance of a highly qualified Hope Online teacher, dedicated and compassionate ALPC mentors are trained to aid students in the classroom. “Our mentors, skillfully provide leadership and guide students working in the online curricula,” states Mrs. Malacara. In addition to committed teachers and mentors, ALPC boasts a high rate of parental involvement. Not only are the parents willing to volunteer, fundraise, and help out in other ways, they are active participants in their children’s education, staying informed of their lessons and progress.

“Hope Online has proven to be the best educational option for the students at ALPC,” say Dr. and Mrs. Malacara, “with the innovative technology and advanced curricula these students will continue to achieve success academically, now and in the future.”
